WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- A wet storm system will produce widespread gusty winds, rain and low snow levels for portions of Northern California valley and mountain locations today through Monday, 02/26/18.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

- <https://alerts-v2.weather.gov/counties/CA>

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

The unsettled weather pattern throughout the region will continue for the next 7 days and beyond. The next system will affect the region today with light precipitation. The second one will be stronger and produce heavier and more widespread precipitation across the region as it moves through tomorrow night and Monday. A third system on Tuesday and Tuesday night will be weaker, followed by another late in the week that will produce light precipitation for a few days. Warmer and wetter systems are expected to impact the region during week 2.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Expect 3-5 degrees of warming today and tomorrow. Tomorrow temperatures should be close to seasonal averages. Today, expect lighter winds, except in the Antelope Valley where west winds of 20-30 mph will be possible this afternoon. Another system will bring cooler, wetter weather early next week. This storm is expected to be quite similar to the last two with only light precipitation expected. Showers will begin across the central part of the state Monday afternoon before spreading southward into Southern California Monday night into Tuesday. Precipitation amounts will be around a half inch along the central coast and Sierras with the region seeing up to a quarter of an inch. Snow levels will be down to 3,000' by Monday night. Warmer weather will return during the middle of next week. Some long range models depict a much wetter system arriving during the first few days of March. No significant offshore winds are expected through the period.
